
Invitation to Effective Grant Writing for Early-Career Researchers Workshop

13 March 2025

Research Support Office – European Centre and the Faculty of Education invite you to a workshop on Effective Grant Writing for Early-Career Researchers led by ERC Consolidator grantee Prof. Miri Yemini from Technion Israel Institute of Technology.

Date: 1. 4. 2025, 10:00–12:00

Venue: Patriotic Hall, Karolinum (Ovocný trh 560/5, Prague)

This workshop is designed to demystify the grant writing process and equip you with the tools necessary to craft persuasive proposals that resonate with funders, using European Research Council (ERC) grants as an example. Whether you are seeking funding for your dissertation research or planning future projects, this workshop will provide comprehensive insights into the strategies that lead to successful grant applications.

Additionally, it will offer information on the support mechanisms provided by the European Centre Rectorate at Charles University.

Workshop Outcomes:

Gain a thorough understanding of various types of funding opportunities available for early-career researchers, including ERC grants, and how to identify those that align with your research goals.

Learn to construct persuasive and well-structured proposals that effectively communicate the significance and impact of your research, with specific tips on ERC applications.

Acquire skills for preparing detailed and realistic proposals that comply with funder guidelines to enhance your proposal's competitiveness.

About the speaker:

Professor Miri Yemini is a full Professor of Education in the Faculty of Education for Science and Technology at Technion. There, she leads a research group focusing on global dimensions of education. The research group conducts multidisciplinary studies aimed at understanding policy-making processes in the field of education, examining the practices of various stakeholders in educational systems worldwide, and proposing approaches to enhance educational practices within and beyond schools. Between 2023 and 2028, Professor Yemini is leading a large international research funded by the European Research Council, aiming to study youth activism in diverse contexts, including climate crisis and human rights. Research within the group belongs to the fields of comparative education and sociology of education.
